The introduction of water from the Lake rendered another addition to the first building necessary. This addition gave us a bush-rooms with a capacious bath fank and apparatus, where twenty-five boys can wash their hands in a pure twenty-five boys can wash their hands in a pure running stream, at the same time. It gaves us also an enlargement to rick tichen of double its former dimensions. Upstains it gave us a ironing room and rection. All these rooms have been appropriately fitted up with shelves and benches. We have also made material alterations in the appearance of the front yard, fitting it up with gravel walks, and changing the low grounds, from being the meat unsightly, into the most attractive portions of the yard.

We gave our readers the other day a taste the quality of the Cotton-Plant. It is most iving the African trade in black humanity ment of direct trade between the Southern States and Europe. Its project is quite as brilliant as anything that has emanated from any one of the several Southern Commercial Conventions. It being clearly impossible for the South to sustain an independent line of steamers running directly between any one of of its ports and Europe, the Cotton-Plant proposes a secondary connection with the Gal. proposes a secondary connection with the Gal-way line, through coasting steamers running between Baltimore and St. John's. In short, York, and on the other side, Galway is to The economy of the operation is its most extraordinary feature. Cotton and tobacco, the great staples of the South, are first to shipped to Baltimore; there re-sed to St. John's; then transferred supped to St. John's; then transferred to the Galway steamers, which must go out of their way to touch at Liverpool, or their cargoes, on arriving at Galway, he shipped anew for the former port.

This is the most brilliant project that has yet been broached for the emancipation of Southern trade from Northern control. It is certainly practicable, provided the certainly practicable, provided the certains.

Another Address from Lord Brougham.
The world had half forgotten Lord Brougham, or only remembered him as a grand luminary that had sunk below the firmament of human activity, when it was electrified by his most able and beautiful oration delivered at the inauguration of the monument to Sir Lasse Revton at Grantham. Of all the great men of England, he was chosen as the fittest orator for the occasion, and it has ben well said that "Henry Brougham at forty could not have excelled "Henry Brougham at eighty." His own great attainments in science, his just appreciat of its dignity and of the noble character of Newton, were fused into a majestic yet glowing eloquesce that could have flowed from the lips of no other living man.

His quarrel with a for colonizing Virginia, every paper in the State opposed him. Now footteen papers favor his scheme, and it is at the same time strongly his scheme, and it is at the same time strongly "few nigger drivers gives us a chance to "make him an Anti-Slavery man. We proposed to elect a Republican to the Senate. Tou proposed to elect a pro-slaver Democrat in the hope he would cheat other pro-slavery Democrats, instead of cheating you. So much for that. And on the score of sagacity the event has shown to our minds that the moral weight of the New York Tri bune and those individuals who co-operate with it, thrown against us not only b State Convention, but up to the day of elec-tion, has defeated us by a beggarly majority in the Legislative districts. We judge that it is this mainly which has defeated us, and we ndge from our personal knowledge of the infuences which dragged our majority down in this city from 1200 to 800. And so much for hat. The same future now awaits all of us beginning by sincere hostility to slavery ex-tension. Your way of accomplishing the end had in view was different from ours. We believe you committed an error of judge And that is all.

The Gazette de Cologne has learned from its Vienna correspondent that a conspiracy against the life of the Emperor Alexander has been diathe inte of the Emperor Alexander has been dis-covered and the persons concerned in it arrested, but nothing tending to confirm the intelligence has yet appeared. In fact, the correctness of the news is greatly questioned. The Russians boast much of the personal courage of the Emperor Nicholas, but the present monarch is the braver man, for he has dared to undertake a task from which his father shrank. The late Czar once in plain terms confessed to a cerebrated Austrian statesman that he was "affail to meedle with the statesman that he was "afraid to meddle with the serf question."

Arrested for Murder.

A young Minnesota farmer, a German, named Robert Lumer, was one Saturday night arrested at Rheinbold's boarding house, on Second near Plum street, upon the grave charge of murder. His accounter is Win. Groser, also a German, brother of the murdered man, Frederick Groser. The particles lived in Munesota, thirty miles above St. Paul, where, in a quarrel respecting the payment of a debt, on the 27th of last March, Laumer levelled a gun and shot Prederick through the breast. The slayer them ran, and the wounded man chased some saxty yards, when he fell, and shortly expired. His brother, who was present, continued the other corpse. The deceased was aged thirty-one years, and had no family. Laumer is aged about levely-seven, and has a wife and child. The fugitive came down the river and the surviving ber esveral months ago. His efforts absorbed his money and proved futile, so that three weeks since he sought and obtained work as a hostler at the omnibus stables on Seventh street, near Flora Garden. On Priday, a person who knew Laumer, saw him on Second street, and at once informed Wm Groser, who then placed the police upon the murderer, got them all astern and some distance and some distance apart. A Model Merchant.

[Estract from a letter dated London, Oct. 10, 1808.]

I dined yesterday with ——, who may well be called a model merchant; not because business cems the business of his life, but precisely because called a model merchant; not because business seems the business of his life, but precisely because it is not so. He makes business subservient to him; he is never the slave of business. I was asking him after dinner about the colonial trade, of which he is thoroughly conversant, but to my surprise he waived reply, very politely, however, and said, "Come to my counting-room in business, hours, between 12 and 3, and I will give you all the information you want. I have made it a rule-for many years, never to talk business away from business." This led to further remark, when he told me that he devoted as little time as was absolutely necessary to business purposes, and experience had shown him that as much could be effected in a well-regulated counting-house between ten and three, as longer. That he let his clerks do for him all that they could do; he and his partner doing only what the others could not do; he had had his share of business, making-business a pleasure, and yet as brief a pleasure as possible, confining such thought and action within as few hours as he could, and when he left his counting-room he would no more let commercial matters intrude into his domestic and social life and conversation, than he would let a saake into his pleasure grounds. "If your countrymen would let business be an accessory," said he, "and not an end of life, they would find life a very different matter than many, to my knowledge, now do. When I visited the States in 1849, one of the most agreeable men I met with in the counting-bouse was —: but out of his "money mill." GREAT WONDER OF THE NINETEENTH CENTURY, PROFESSOR WOOD'S

The Hermitagle—A gentleman who has just timited the Hermitage, the residence of General Jackson, thus writes of what he saw there:

"Prominent among the curiosities was a wooden putcher. It was made of wood from the clu tree under which William Pean made the ce-brated indisn treaty. The picher was made and presented by the coopers of Philadelphia, and although it is not larger than a common cream jug, it contains 750 staves. The hoops, lip had handle are sliver; the bettorn is a magnificent glass, by looking through which one is enabled to see the joints, which are not visible to the naked eya. We will next notice 'Old Hickory'. This is a double cup—that is, two cups with one bottom, so that when is turned up the other is turned down. It is, as its name implies, of hickory, and what is more singular about it, has a natural handle. It is simply a block about one foot in length, with both ends holiowing, and was cut on Long Island from a hictory sprout, the parent stem of which was sewered by a cannon-ball in the war of the Revolution.

A Hoble, Ala., paper gives an account of an inquest recently held in that city, on the body or a man who died from taking an over dose of vegetable pills. On opening the body, the interior was found to be one huge cabbage, but dead to its core, from confinement and want of water—a beverage which the patient, unfortunately, never drank. The jury returned a vericit of "quika." "Quita, gentlemen!" exclaimed the diamayed coroner, "never heard of such a thing. What do you mean?" "Why" replied the foreman, "we find that, if the cabbage killed the man, the man most certainly killed the cabbage, and if that aint quits, blow me." Done in the Best Manner. PRINTING IN COLORS A MARRIAGE TRAGEDY

BY WILKIE COLLINS. With these words he sellpped out of the room, and left me, as he had found me, in the dark.

I was far too much agitated by what I had heard to think of going to sleep again; so I struck a light, and tried to amuse myself as well as I could with an old newspaper that had been stuffed into my carpet-bag. It was then neafly ten o'clock. Two hours later, when the house shut up, Mr. Dark came back to me again in high spurits. "I have got the whole case here," says he, tapping his fore-head.—"the whole case, as neat and clear as if it was drawn in a brief. That master of yours doesn't stick at a trifle, William. It's my opinion that your misress and you have not seen the last of him yet."

We were elevening that night in a double-bedded giam. As soon as Mr. Dark had secured the foor and disposed himself comfortably in his bed, he entered on a detailed narrative of the particulars communicated to him in the tap-room. The substance of what he told me may be related as follows:

The yacht had had a wonderful run all the way to Cape Wrath. Ou rounding the headland she had met the wind nearly dead against her, and had beaten every inch of the way to the sea-port town, where she had put in to get a supply of provisions, and to wait for a change in the wind. Mr. James Smith had gone ashere to look about him, and to see whether the principal hotel was the core of whether the related had be the exception of the subsection of the subsection of the subsection of the related as follows: lug at Cowes; and we can send to the church for legal evidence of the marriage as soon as we are instructed to do so. All that we have got to do now is to go back to your mistress, and see what course she means to take under the circumstances. It's a pretty case, Wil-lian, so far—a uncommonly pretty case, as it stands at present."

We returned to Darrock Hall as fast a-coaches and post-hogse could cary us. Have ing from the first believed that the statement to the analysmost letter was true, my nic. in the anonymous letter was true, my mis-tress received the bad news we brought calmiy and resignedly—so far, at least, as calmy and resignedly—so far, at least, as outward appearances went. She astonished and disappointed Mr. Dark, by declining to set, in any way, on the information that he had collected for her, and by insisting that the whole affair should still be buried in the profoundest secreey. For the first time since I had known my traveling companion, he became depressed in spirits on hearing that nothing more was to be done; and although he left the Hall with a handsome present, he left it discontedly.

"Such a pretty case, William!" says he, quite sorrowfully, as we shook hands in the hall. "Such an uncommonly pretty case! It's a thousand pities to stop it, in this way, before its, half over!"

"You don't know what a proud lady and what a delicate lady my mistress is," I answered. "She would die rather than expose her foriors situation in a public court, for the sake of punishing her hashand."

"Bless your simple heart!" says Mr. Dark, "do you really think, now, that such a case as this can be hushed up?"

"Why not," I asked, "if we all keep the secret?" change in the wind. Mr. James Smith had gone ashore to look about him, and to see whether the principal hotel was the sort of house at which he would like to stop for a few days. In the source of his wanderings about the town, his attention had been attracted to a decent house, where lodgings were to be let, by the sight of a very pretty girl sitting at work at the parlor-window. He was so struck by her face that he came back twice to look at it, determining the He was so struck by her face that he came back twice to look at it, determining, the second time, to try if he could not make acquaintance with her by asking to see the lodgings. He was shown the rooms by the girl's mother, a very respectable woman, whom he discovered to be the wife of the master and part-owner of a small coaching-vessel, then away at sea. With a little stanceuvring he managed to get into the parior where the daughter was at work, and to exchange a few words with her. Her voice and manner equaled and completed the attraction of her face. Mr. James Smith de-"Why not," I asked, "if we all keep the secret?"

"Why not," I asked, "if we all keep the secret?"

"That for the secret!" cries Mr. Dark, snapping his fingers. "Your master will let the cat out of the bag, if nobody else does."

"My master!" I repeated, in amazement.

"Yes, your master?" says Mr. Dark. "I have had some experience in ny time, and I say you have not seen the last of him yet. Mark my words, William! Mr. James Smith will come back."

With that startling prophecy Mr, Dark irritably treated himself to a final pinch of suuff, and departed in silence on his journey back to his master in London. His last words hung heavely on my mind for days after he had gone. It was some weeks before I got over a habit of starting whenever the bell was rung at the front door.

Our life at the Hall soon returned to its old, dreary course. The lawyer in London wrote to my mistress to ask her to come and stay for a little while with his wife. But she declined the luvitation, being averse to facing commany after what had happaned to her exchange a few words with her. Her voice and manner equaled and completed the attraction of her face. Mr. James Smith decided, in his headlong way, that he was violently in love, with her; and, without hesitaing another instant, he took the lodgings on the spot for a month ecriain.

It is unnecessary to say that his designs on the girl were of the most dishonorable kind, and that he represented himself to the mother and daughter as a single man. Aided by his advantages of money, position, and personal appearance, he had anticipated that the ruin of the girl might be effected with very little able of him—and, as it seemed to me, with perfect ard her truth—that any implied engagement which e kind, he had made with Mr. James Smith was now understanding that his advances toward ber were of any other than an honorable kind, truth—that any implied engagement which he had made with Mr. James Smith was now canceled, since the person so named had morally forfeited all his claims as a husband—first, by his desertion of her - and, secondly, by his criminal marriage with another woman. After staining this view of the matter, she left it to Mr. Meeke to decide whether the perfectly innocent connection between them should be resumed or not. The little parson, after hesitating and pondering, in his help-less way, ended by agreeing with my mistress, and by coming back once more to the Hall with his field e under his arm. This renewal of their old habits might have been improdent enough, as tending to weaken the strenth of my mistress's case in the eyes of the world; but, for all that, it was the most sensible course she could take for her own sake. The harmless company of Mr. Meeke, and the relief of playing the old tunes again in the old way saved her, I verily believe, from sinking altogether under the oppression of the shocking situation in which she was now placed.

So with the assistance of Mr. Meeke and his fiddle, my mistress got through the wears time. and not calculated on that sort of resistance, and he was perfectly incapable of overcomagit. The weeks passed; the month for which he had taken the lodgings expired. Films had strengthened the gir. shold on im till his admiration for her amounted to beolute infatuation; and he had not adacaced one step yet toward the execution of he vicious purpose with which he had entered the house.

the vicious purpose with which he had entered he house.

At this time he must have made some fresh attempt on the girl's virtue, which produced a coolness between them; for, instead of taking the lodgings on for another term, he removed to his yacht in the harbor, and slept on board for two nights. The wind was now fair, and the stores were on board; but he gave no orders to the sailing master to weigh anchor. On the third day the cause of the coolness, whatever it was, appears to have been removed, and he returned to his lodgings on shore. Some of the more curious among the townspeople observed soon afterward, when they met him in the street, that he looked rather anxious and uneas. The conclusion had probably forced itself upon his mind by this time that he must decide on parsuing one of two courses. Either he must resolve to make the sacrifice of leaving the girl altogether, or to commit the villalay of marrying her.

Unscruptions as he was, he hesitated at encountering the risk—perlaps, also, at being placed.

So with the assistance of Mr. Meeke and his fiddle, my mistress got through the weary time. The winter passed; the spring came and no fresh tidings reached us of Mr. James Smith. It had been a long, hard winter that year, and the spring was backward and rainy. The first really fine day we had was the day that fell on the fourter int of Marcht. I am particular in mentioning this date merely because it is fixed forever in my memory. As long as there is life in me I shall remember that fourteenth of March, and the smallest circumstance connected with it. The day began ill, with what superstitious people would think a had omen. My mistress remained late in her room in the morning, amusing herself by looking over her clothes, and by setting to rights some drawns in her cabinet which she had not opened for some time past. Just before the luncheon hour we were startled by hearing the drawing-room bell rung violently. I ran up to see what was the matter, and Josephine, the French maid, who had heard the bell in another part of the house, hastened to answer it also. See got into the drawing-room first, and I followed close to her heels. My mistress was standing alone on the cearth-rug, with an appearance of creat discomponent in her face. must resolve to make the sacrifice of leaving the girl altogether, or to commit the villainy of marrying her.

Unserupalous as he was, he hesitated at encountering the rick—perhaps, also, at being guilty of the crime—involved in the best auternative. While he was still in doubt, the father's coasting-vessel salled into the harbor, and the father's presence on the scene decided him at last. How this new influence acted it was impossible to ascertain, from the necessarily imperfect evidence of persons who were not admitted to the family councils. The fact, however, was indisputable, that the date of the father's return and the date of Mr. James Smith's first wicked resolution to marry the girl might both be fixed, as nearly as possible, at one and the same time.

Having once made up his mind to the commission of the crime, he proceeded, with all possible coolness and cunning, to provide against the chances of detection. Returning on board his yacht, he announced that he had given up his intention of cruising to Sweden, and that he intended to asmas himself by a long fishing tour in Scotland. After this beief explanation he ordered the vessel to be laid up in the harbor, gave the salling-master leave of absence to return to his family at Cowes, and paid off the whole of the crew, from the mate to the cabin-boy. By these means he cleared the scene, at one blow, of the only people in the town who knew of the existence of his unhappy wife. After that, the news of his approaching marriage might be made public without risk of discovery: his own common name being of itself a sufficient protection, in case the event was mentioned in the local newspapers. All his triends, even his wife herselt, might read a report of the marriage of Mr. James Smith, without having the elightest suspicion of who the bridegroom really was.

A fortnight after the paying off of the erew he was married to the merchant-captain's daughter. The lather of the girl was well known among his fellow-townsmen as a selficit, grasping mar in the north an manner.

y of bid manager, whiles, and hiefs."

"If you have any suspicions, ma'am," said Josephine, in a singularly sharp, sudden way "say who they point at. My boxes, for one are quite at your disposition."

"Who asked you about your boxes?" said my mistress, angrily. "Be a little less ready my mistress, angrily. ith your answer, if you please the ime I speak."

more than enough, to prove the truth of the statement of the anonymous letter," I answered.

"Yes," says Mr. Dark; "but did I tell you who wrote the anonymous letter."

"You don't mean to say you have found that out?" says I.

"I think I have," was the cool answer. When I heard about your precious master paying off the regular crew of the yacht, I put the circumstance by in my mind, to be brought out again and sifted a little as soon as the opportunity offered. It off red in about hall an hour. Says I to the gauger, who was the principal talker in the room, 'How about those men that Mr. Smith paid off? Did they all go as soon as they got their money, or did they stop here till they had spent every farthing of it in the public houses? The gauger laughs. 'No such luck,' says be. 'They all went south, to spend their money among finer people than us. When I say all, though, I must make one exception. We thought the steward of the yacht had gone along with the rest; when, the very day Mr. Smith sailed for the Mediterranean, who should turn up mexpectedly but the steward himself. Where he had been hiding, and why he had been hiding, nobody could tell.' Perlaps he had been impling his master, and looking out for a wife, says I. 'Likely enough,' says the gauger; he gave a very confused account of himself, and he cut all questions short by going away south in a violent hurty.' That was enough for me; I said no more, and let the subject drop. Clear as daylight; isn't it, William? Every letter we receive from the nor counties containing official returns bring comfortless intelligence that from one to nedred Republicans staid away from olls on account of the rain. The whole orth of the parallel of Peoria was drea and in every county not closely contest large number of Republicans, deeming State ticket safe, preferred the comforts fiteside to a ride or walk of two or three i thing will never do. The Whig party is olden time was distinguished for its lov ease in bad weather. We trust our fri their escape this time. We believe our last Tuesday.

About Outstanding Bets.
We have very little sympachy for the who loses an election bet, and still less man who wins one; but having been inqui of several times whether wagers against Douglas' re-election should be given up, suggest that none of them are due until event takes place on which the overco patent leather boots, silk dresses, trott gigs, cash, etc., were staked. Mr. Dong cannot neglight be redeated better the cannot possibly be re-elected before Janua and he may not be then. Of course par who pay over now will stand a slim cha of collecting back, in case of a slip between
